This is not an abstract.

First, you must be aware that the term paper is a more complex type of academic work than the abstract or ordinary control. Otherwise, the teacher will indicate you that you wrote an abstract, and not a course.

So, what is the exchange rate different from the abstract?

If the abstract is based, first of all, on theoretical sources, uses their data, allows a large percentage of quoting and compiling texts from various textbooks and articles, then the exchange rate pays a lot of attention of the author's position, and also often involves a practical research on the topic.

Speaking easier, the exchange rate is different not only with the volume (otherwise it would be just a big abstract). In the course you must express your opinion on a given topic and conduct a practical research on the issue. Currency Writing Steps

Writing a successful course work is a number of steps that will lead you to the ultimate goal. Consider them.

Step 1. Select the topic.

If you have the opportunity to choose the topic, choose the one you are closer and in which you understand something. It is advisable to approve the topic of the teacher to the teacher, so that after no misunderstanding.

Step 2. Work plan.

The work plan is a very important part of it. It gives a clear understanding of what information you need, what and in what sequence you will do. The plan is better to agree with the teacher so that it does not subsequently rewrite all the work.

Step 3. Selection of sources.

Try to find as many sources you can reveal your subject design. Consider not only textbooks, but also monographs, scientific articles, and even journalism. Make focus on more recent sources. Please note that you can consider different opinions on your question.
